Process for Establishing Salaries of State Elected Officials

The Minnesota Constitution provides that:

- the duties and salaries of the executive officers shall be prescribed by law (Art. V, sec. 4)
- the compensation of all judges shall be prescribed by the legislature and shall not be diminished during the term of office (Art. VI, sec. 5)
- the compensation of senators and representatives shall be prescribed by law. No increase of compensation shall take effect during the period for which the members of the existing House of Representatives may have been elected (Art. IV, sec. 9)

The constitutional provision governing judges (“prescribed by the legislature”) has been interpreted to mean that the governor may not veto a provision dealing with judicial compensation (Gardner v. Holm, 241 Minn. 125, 62 N.W.2d 52 (1954)). The governor does have veto power over legislation establishing compensation for legislators and executive officers because compensation for these officials must be prescribed “by law.”

The legislature has established a compensation council to assist it in establishing the compensation of constitutional officers, judges, and legislators. (The council also makes recommendations for compensation of heads of state and metropolitan agencies.) Minn. Stat. § 15A.082.

The 16-member council includes:

- three members of the House of Representatives and three senators;
- two nonjudges appointed by the chief justice of the Minnesota Supreme Court; and
- one person from each congressional district, appointed by the governor.

There is a new compensation council appointed by October 1 of each even-numbered year.

The council must make salary recommendations by May 1 of each odd-numbered year. The recommended salary for each office must take effect in January of the next odd-numbered year, with no more than one adjustment to take effect on January 1 of the year after that (e.g., the council that meets in 2000-2001 will make recommendations to take effect in January 2003, with a possible adjustment in January 2004). The statute provides that in making recommendations the council shall consider:

- the amount of compensation paid in government service and the private sector to persons with similar qualifications;
- the amount of compensation needed to attract and retain experienced and competent persons; and
- the ability of the state to pay the recommended compensation.

For legislators, the council also must consider the average length of a legislative session, the amount of work required of legislators during interim periods, and opportunities to earn income from other sources without neglecting legislative duties.

The recommendations of the compensation council are not binding on the legislature. The statute creating the council provides that the salary recommendations take effect if an appropriation of money to pay the recommended salaries is enacted after the recommendations are submitted and before their effective date. As a practical matter, when the legislature has increased salaries, it generally has done so either by expressly adopting or modifying compensation council recommendations or by establishing percentage increases in law without reference to compensation council recommendations. The salary increase recommendations of the last compensation council, in April 1999, were not implemented by the legislature.
